Makary Górzyński holds a PHD degree in art history studies from the Faculty of History, Institute of Art History, University of Warsaw (2019). He received his B.A. and M.A. in art history from the University of Warsaw in 2010 and 2012. His dissertation will discuss architecture, urban development and discourses concerning urban space in a late nineteenth-century Kalisz, the historic Polish town that at the time acted as a Russian borderline governorate capital and an emerging industrial city. His research interests focus on relationships between politics, modernization, urban planning and nineteenth-century architecture and its perceptions in Central and Eastern Europe. He published a three-volume guide to architectural monuments of the Turek county, a monographs of the nineteenth-century town hall and theatre in Kalisz (2014; 2017; the first book was awarded by the Polish Society of Art Historians in 2015) and a few essays, concerning f. e. urban development narratives for Warsaw during the 1900s.
